Back during my days in undergrad as an (don't laugh) English Lit. major, I had to take a class called Fiction Seminar. One day for the class, we had an assignment which was to write a short story. But not just a short story, a short story so short it was confined to only one paragraph. I struggled for a week to even come up with a plot, let alone the first sentence. I think that was the most time I had ever spent on school work throughout my entire academic career... and it still turned out horrible.

That's why after viewing the 3 minute 53 second short MAVET, I was totally blown away. Do you know how HARD it is do to something like this? Seriously! To create an entire plot-- let alone a mystery plot-- within a shot amount of time is not only ingenious but near impossible.

The plot is as follows: Two men sit in a dark room playing what seems to be an innocent game of chess. One is a younger gentleman who acts cocky and over-confident. The other individual is a middle-aged gentleman, who appears to be very anxious with each move he makes. However, there is much more to this game of strategy and wits....

Once again, RUSSEM PRODUCTIONS gives us a powerful little package of film entertainment. With the script by Emile Haris and music by Neil Argo, it is no wonder why this little gem has recieved so much praise. As for the title itself, well... I did some
